

NYC Metro Region Explorer opens the door to regional data

NYC is the center of a large region that spans across city, county and state boundaries. Though we are governed independently, many of our planning challenges are interconnected, and our city's future is intertwined with the future of our larger region.

This resource was developed to help New Yorkers understand the city's relationships and interdependencies to areas outside our borders. It enables the public, planners and policy makers to examine the regional context for shared planning challenges.
